MRC Maury County Airport

Aviation Moves Tennessee

Tennessee's aviation system has 76 public-use airports that support a wide range of activities, from commercial airline travel to private aircraft operations. Aviation contributes approximately 9% of Tennessee's gross domestic product (GDP) and generates an estimated $53.8 billion in total economic impact across the state. To better understand how these airports support Tennessee's economy, the Tennessee Department of Transportation (TDOT) Aeronautics Division conducted an updated Aviation Economic Impact Study.

About Maury County Airport

Serving the City of Columbia and surrounding areas of Maury County in Middle Tennessee, Maury County Regional Airport (MRC) provides general aviation access within a region that includes manufacturing, logistics, and healthcare activity. The airport functions as an important aviation facility for business travel, public-service operations, and freight movement in an area where air transportation complements highway and rail access.

Maury County Regional Airport is a publicly owned, public-use general aviation airport featuring a 6,000-foot runway capable of accommodating a wide range of general aviation aircraft, including business jets and specialized operations. The runway length and supporting infrastructure allow the airport to support corporate aviation, emergency response missions, and freight-related activity while enhancing regional accessibility.

Several aviation-related organizations operate directly on-airport. Air Methods maintains a presence conducting emergency response and public-service aviation missions that support regional safety and emergency operations. In addition, Tennessee Flight Training operates on-field, providing pilot instruction and flight training services. General Motors also utilizes the airport to support freight deliveries and executive travel.
